What a Learned Englishman Thinks of Us.

Mr. W. R. Greg, of England, is well known in intellectual circles as an ocea signal contributor to the Contemporar Review, as the author of "Enigmas of Life" and some other very readable books, and as a writer of great perspicacity and acumen. He has lately writ ten a work which is attracting quite : degree of public attention, entitled "Rocks Ahead, or the Warnings of Cas sandra." He thinks he sees three great dangers menacing the future of England to which he seeks to call the timely attention of his thoughtful countrymen One he calls the "Political Rock," or the danger arising from the political suprem ncy of the lower classes; the second i "Economic Rock," or the approach ing industrial decline of England; the third he entitles the "Religious Rock," or the divorce of the trained intelligence of England from its religion. This, he says, is a fait accompli in France, and may at no distant day become so in England What Mr. Greg writes under these three heads may well be studied, not only by patriotic Englishmen but by observan Americans. He presents some remarka ble facts in a clear and trenchant style which forebode ill to the mighty empire of Britain. In a lengthy appendix to the work. Mr Greg discusses "three men and three eras: Washington, Jackson, and Buchanan, which affords him the occasion unsparjugly to criticise the offensive features of the fact that the spiritual and materia our national life. He endeavors to show and has partially succeeded), that there has been a constant deterioration of the national character, and aims from Washington's time to Buchanan's. Those mankind." Mr. Tyndall, the English scien-Americans who are accustomed to speak tist, has already put in a protest against slightingly of the intellectual character this assumption. He says in a letter to of Washington would do well to read this noble estimate of his character and services. In contrasting the America of Jackson with the America of Washington, Mr. G. finds great cause for com-plaint. The national changes of forty ears had been enormous and gratifying; territory, commerce, and the number of commonwealths doubled; population tre bled The moral social, and political change had been equally startling, but un fortunately not so encouraging. He complains of the unwise extension of the suffrage by doing away with the property qualification, a manifest departure from the maxims and policy of the Eathers of the Republic. He points out a still more fatal innovation in judiciary system. He arraigns both Jefferson and Jackson for attempts to bring courts of justice under the direct to bring courts of justice under the direct control of the people. In Jackson's time, exact character of the contest in which five out of the twenty-four States then they are likely to be involved, and that they are highly people the judges elective. existing had made the judges elective,

The election of judges by the people in twenty-two States of the Union, he regards as a dark omen for the future of Republican institutions. The selection of inferior caudidates for the Presidency by the great political conventions; the the barbarism engendered by the slave lieuwely the frequency and british is a sum of the productive political class.

It was to repair this strange and in-precedented state of affairs that the IIon. Sam. Randall stepped to the from with his Amnesty bill. The first measure that struck him, as a great American states—man, was the addition of seven hundred and fifty able-bodied Confederates to the candidates for office in the South. The trouble without the augmentation of this productive political class.

It was assumed in the promp of Randall the barbarism engendered by the slave oligarchy; the frequency and brutality of duelling; the notorious ineffeciency and dishonesty, of American rulers and statesmen; the corruptness, unscrupulousness and feebleness of James Buchanan himself, are clearly brought out in the pages of this thoughtful Englishman. The country of Washington had undergone an entire change, and that for the worse in its moral and political aspect, from 1700 to 1860.

His concluding pages, written very recently, are scarcely more complimentary or whose friends had voted for his oppo

life has been rapid and appalling. He quotes largely from American publications to substantiate his positions. He dwells principally on the corruption manifest in New York city of lar years, the disgraceful character of which patriotic Americans confess with abame. Mr. Greg is not naturally a democrat, but he is certainly not an enemy to America, and his merciless review of our national sins deserves patient consideration at our hands. That he has overlooked our virtues; that he has but barely mentioned our vast recuperative power; that he alights the integrity and intelligence of the great mass of our people, will not excuse us for seeking to cover up and hide our shameful transgressions. Our present, imperative duty is to fulfill the hope expressed by Mr. Greg, "that we will curn over a new leaf and retrace our false steps, and endeavor to attain to d social and political condition of which we may be justly proud." We may and ought 190 throw overboard that class of political adventurers, whose shameless rapacity disgraces and dishonors us in the eyes of the civilized world. The nation is sound at the core, and these diagusting excreseences ought to be cut away.

The Vatican and Education.

The Vatican and Education.

The Vatican and Education.

The Vatican and Education.

The real issue between the Vatican and the world upon the question of education is very clearly brought out in a letter recently published in France, written by Monsign for the Bishop of Montpelier, to the Deans and Professors of the Faculties of Montpelier, and bearing date Dec. 8, 1875. In this letter the Bishop says: 8, 1875. In this letter the Bishop says

Now, gentlemen, the Holy Church holds herself to be invested with the ab-solute right to teach mankind; she holds herself to be the depositary of the truth solute right to teach markind; she holds herself to be the depositary of-the truth—not a fragmentary truth, incomplete, a mixture of certainty and hesitation, but the total truth, complete, from a religious point of view. Much more, she is so sure of the infallibility conferred on her Divine Founder, as the magnificent dowry of their indissoluble alliance, that even in the natural order of things, scientific or philosophical, moral or political, she will not admit that a system can be adopted and sustained by Christians, if it contradict definite dogmas. She considers that the voluntary and obstinate denial of a single point of her doctrine involves that the voluntary and obstinate denial of a single point of her doctrine involves the crime of hereay, and she holds that all formal heresy, if it be not courageously rejected prior to appearing before God, carries with it the certain loss of grace and of eternity. As defined by Pope Leo X, at the Sixth Council of the Lateran, "Truth cannot contradict itself; consequently, every assertion contrary to a revealed verity of faith is necessarily and absolutely false," It follows from this, without entering into the examination of this or that question of physiology and solely by the certified of our dogthis, without entering into the examina-tion of this or that question of physiolo-gy, and solely by the certitude of our dog-mas, we are able to pronounce judgment on any hypothesis which is an anti-Chris-tian engine of war rather than a serious conquest over the secrets and mysteries of Nature.

This is the briefest and simplest defaition of the attitude of Rome towards education that has yet been made. There is no danger that it can be misunderstood or misconstrued. It is freed from all unnecessary verbiage or any concealment of eaning. It is a bare, bald statement of fact that the wayfaring man, though fool, can understand. It is a recognition of progress of the Church is dependent upon control of education, and hence the asser tion of the Bishop, without condition of reservation ,of "the absolute right to teach the London Times:

Liberty is a fine word, tyranny a hate-ful one, and both have been eloquently employed of late in reference to the deal-ings of the secular arm with the preten-tions of the Vatican. But "liberty" has two mutually exclusive meanings—the "liberty" of Rome to teach mankind; and the liberty of the human race. Neither the liberty of the human race. Neithe the neerly of the human race. Settlement nor compromise is possible here. One liberty or the other must go down. This, in our day, is the "conflict" so impressively described by Draper, in which every thoughtful man must take a observations: "It is well that the issue upon the Vati can side has been thus clearly and un-mistakably made, and the Bishop of Montpelier is entitled to credit for his sincerity and honesty in making it. they are likely to be involved, and that it is a contest which does not admit of compromise. It must be settled either that have a contest which does not admit of desperate and fatal blow to the dignity and purity of republican government in America ever inflicted upon it by friend or foo." Jackson it was who inaugurated the policy of removing government employes for their political opinions. Prior to this time they held office during life or good behavior, and never changed with change of administration. During Washington's administration only nine persons were removed from office, none for political reasons. Adams removed nine and Jessen thirty-nine, but all for causes other than political, Madison made five removals; Monroe nine; J. Q. Adams, two only. As soon as Jackson was inaugurated he dismissed from office nearly every man who had opposed him, and political reasons and poposed him, and nent, and replaced them by partisans of his own. Mr. Greg attributes the incapacity and corruption of our civil service not to the Republican party, but to that Democratic saint, Andrew Jackson. Passing on to Mr. Buchanan's time, he discovers growing evidence of our corruption and dishonesty. He says that at that time elections had fallen into the hands of professional agents, who employed bribery, calumny, intimidation and promises; and who were "the most noxions" if was to repair this strange and un From the Cincinnati Commercial.
